

Website Redesign Creative Direction

Direction for Graphic Design, Web Design & Development Team

DESIGN NORTH STAR

Established. Elegant. Substantial.

The redesigned website should feel like an established private enterprise with institutional credibility - not a startup landing page, online coaching funnel, or AI-generated luxury brand.

Prepared for: JUBOH Companies International

September 20, 2026

The redesign needs a change in character, not just styling.

The current Vercel redesign should be treated as a technical and content prototype - not the final creative direction. The issue is larger than typography, colors, or spacing. The current concept changes how JUBOH is perceived: it reads more like a generational-wealth platform, family-office concept, or premium coaching funnel than a diversified operating company.

The next design pass should return the brand to the strongest elements of the existing JalenUboh.com architecture - clear businesses, clear services, real projects, leadership, press, and contact - while upgrading the presentation to a more refined, institutional standard.

Primary directive

Preserve clarity. Increase elegance. Reduce conceptual language. Show the enterprise through real work, real people, real assets, and disciplined design.

What the website must communicate

- JUBOH is an established, privately held enterprise - not a digital-first startup.
- The company operates across real estate development, business strategy and capital advisory, government contracting, executive education, and philanthropy.
- The brand is capable of engaging banks, institutional investors, universities, municipalities, churches, corporate executives, developers, and sophisticated private clients.
- The company has breadth, but the website must organize that breadth with restraint and hierarchy.
- Credibility should come from projects, people, outcomes, relationships, experience, and verified metrics - not from inflated luxury language.

The site should look like the company already belongs in the room - not like it is trying to convince the visitor that it does.

Design for institutional confidence.

The reference point is not a typical consulting or coaching website. The preferred visual category is a sophisticated private enterprise: real estate developer, investment platform, capital advisory firm, and family enterprise presented through one disciplined corporate identity.

THE BRAND SHOULD FEEL	NOT LIKE THIS	REFERENCE CATEGORY
Established Elegant Substantial Measured Confident Human	Futuristic Flashy Techy Over-designed Sales-funnel driven AI-formatted	Hines Related Companies Private investment firm Traditional family enterprise Architectural editorial publication

Core brand statement

Retain and elevate the existing brand line

BUILDING AN EXCEPTIONAL FUTURE, TOGETHER!

This should return to prominence. It is broader, more memorable, and better suited to a diversified enterprise than a narrow wealth-architecture statement.

Recommended corporate descriptor

JUBOH Companies International is a privately held enterprise advancing real estate development, business strategy, government contracting, strategic investments, executive education, and community impact across the United States and select international markets.

Why the current site reads as AI-generated.

The current redesign relies heavily on abstract, premium-sounding terminology and repeated modular cards. That combination creates the visual and verbal pattern now commonly associated with AI-generated corporate websites.

1. Too much abstract language. Terms such as architecture, framework, stewardship, deployment flow, multipliers, pillars, blueprint, and legacy are repeated until they stop communicating concrete meaning.
2. Too many conceptual layers on one page. The site attempts to present a family office, wealth institute, advisory company, coaching platform, foundation, store, and international network in a single continuous experience.
3. Card-heavy presentation. Repeated bordered boxes, icon modules, and multi-column grids create a generic SaaS/startup feel rather than an established corporate identity.
4. Luxury is being stated rather than demonstrated. Words such as private, exclusive, legacy, wealth, institutional, and generational are used too frequently instead of allowing photography, projects, scale, and restraint to communicate quality.
5. Sales and corporate content are mixed together. High-level enterprise services sit too close to lower-priced products, promotional pricing, grants, workshops, and store-like calls to action.
6. The visitor has to work too hard to understand what JUBOH actually does. The strongest businesses and projects should be apparent within seconds.

Design correction

Use fewer ideas per screen, larger visual moments, simpler language, stronger hierarchy, and more real evidence. The website should breathe.

Important content caution

Avoid absolute legal, financial, or performance claims such as "bulletproof," "guaranteed," or statements implying that a structure will always prevent a particular outcome. Corporate copy should be confident without creating unnecessary legal or compliance exposure.

Traditional elegance over digital spectacle.

Color direction

Typography

- Headlines: elegant serif typography with editorial character - restrained, not decorative.
- Body copy: clean sans-serif with excellent readability.
- Use strong size contrast: large headlines, modest body copy, small restrained labels.
- Avoid futuristic display fonts, rounded tech typography, excessive all-caps, or multiple typefaces competing on one page.

Photography

- Real photography should be the primary luxury device.
- Prioritize completed developments, active construction, site walks, formal leadership portraits, executive meetings, speaking engagements, institutional partner meetings, and community work.
- Use fewer images, but make them larger and more intentional.
- Avoid generic stock imagery, AI-generated architecture, fake boardrooms, anonymous handshakes, and overly staged luxury imagery.

Layout behavior

- Large editorial image blocks and intentional whitespace.
- Thin rules, understated section labels, clean grids, and generous margins.
- Minimal animation - subtle fades or image movement only where it adds polish.
- Avoid glassmorphism, glowing gradients, floating pills, animated counters everywhere, excessive rounded cards, dashboard motifs, and trendy app-style interfaces.

Visual principle

One exceptional photograph occupying most of a screen can communicate more confidence than six decorative cards.

Sophisticated companies communicate simply.

The revised copy should be shorter, more concrete, and more operational. Visitors should understand the company through what it does, what it has built, whom it serves, and how it creates value.

USE MORE OF	USE LESS OF
Real estate development	Generational architecture
Capital advisory	Wealth deployment ecosystem
Government contracting	Institutional velocity multipliers
Selected projects	Blueprint pillars
Leadership and experience	Legacy language on every screen
Development roles and scope	Unnecessary luxury adjectives
Verified metrics	Absolute guarantees
Case studies and outcomes	Overly conceptual frameworks

Separate corporate content from products

Executive education, coaching, workshops, books, and other purchasable products should not dominate the corporate experience. Create a distinct Executive Education / Academy area with its own pages and conversion strategy.

- Corporate site: institutional services, companies, projects, leadership, capabilities, press, and contact.
- Executive Education: programs, private advisory, workshops, cohorts, application, and program information.
- Foundation: mission, programs, outcomes, leadership, partnerships, and giving.
- Store / books: discreet and secondary - not a core homepage destination.

Avoid crossed-out pricing, promotional discount language, and "50% grant" style sales treatments on the primary corporate site. Where pricing belongs, present it inside program pages in a professional, straightforward manner.

Simplify the top navigation.

Recommended primary navigation

ABOUT | COMPANIES | REAL ESTATE | ADVISORY | GOVERNMENT CONTRACTING | LEADERSHIP | FOUNDATION | NEWS | CONTACT

Optional utility navigation can include Client Portal, Executive Education, Careers, and Search. These should remain visually secondary.

Remove from the primary navigation

- Blueprint
- Pillars
- Asset Protection
- Generic "wealth architecture" categories
- Any label that requires explanation before a visitor understands what it contains

Recommended content hierarchy

7. Corporate identity and value proposition
8. Operating businesses and core capabilities
9. Selected work / projects / case studies
10. Institutional credibility and verified metrics
11. Leadership
12. News, press, insights, and recognition
13. Foundation and community impact
14. Clear contact pathways for new business, media, speaking, and client inquiries

Rule of thumb

If a senior banker, university trustee, public-sector decision maker, developer, or institutional partner cannot understand the company within 20-30 seconds, the page is too conceptual.

Recommended homepage sequence.

The homepage should function like the front door of an established enterprise - not a comprehensive catalog of every product and concept.

01	HERO Full-bleed development, leadership, or project imagery. JUBOH COMPANIES INTERNATIONAL Building an Exceptional Future, Together. Two CTAs only: Explore Our Companies / View Our Work.
02	CREDIBILITY BAR Use only verified metrics: years in business, development value, federal awards, markets served, or comparable proof points.
03	REAL ESTATE DEVELOPMENT Large image + 2-3 sentences + selected developments + link to portfolio.
04	BUSINESS STRATEGY & CAPITAL ADVISORY Institutional imagery. Clear description of the advisory practice, capital strategy, and client types.
05	GOVERNMENT CONTRACTING Capabilities, sectors, contract experience, and relevant operating history.
06	SELECTED PROJECTS / CASE STUDIES Architectural case-study format: project, location, role, scope, status, and imagery.
07	EXECUTIVE EDUCATION A concise gateway into coaching, workshops, private advisory, and corporate training. Do not present as an ecommerce grid.
08	LEADERSHIP Strong portraits, short biographies, clear titles, and links to full profiles.
09	FOUNDATION / COMMUNITY IMPACT A visually distinct section leading to the Foundation experience.
10	PRESS / RECOGNITION / NEWS Selected media, announcements, awards, partnerships, and institutional updates.
11	FOOTER Corporate contact information, office information, companies, legal links, social channels, and client portal.

Build the site around evidence.

Real Estate

- Portfolio-led, image-rich presentation.
- Organize by development type, geography, status, or role where appropriate.
- Every major project page should identify location, client/ownership context, JUBOH role, scope, status, and relevant project facts.
- Use master-development and case-study storytelling rather than generic service copy.

Advisory & Capital

- Present as a professional advisory practice, not a wealth-coaching product.
- Explain capital strategy, development advisory, institutional partnerships, business strategy, and related services in concrete terms.
- Use client types and representative engagements where confidentiality allows.

Government Contracting

- Separate corporate contracting capabilities from education/coaching for contractors.
- Show sectors, contract history, capabilities, certifications, and performance evidence.
- Route training prospects to Executive Education rather than mixing them into the corporate capability page.

Leadership

- Formal portrait system with consistent crops and backgrounds.
- Short, factual biographies emphasizing operating roles, track record, and areas of responsibility.
- Avoid over-long aspirational biographies and unnecessary adjectives.

Foundation

- Give the Foundation its own tone and information hierarchy while maintaining shared brand DNA.
- Lead with mission, programs, outcomes, partnerships, and community imagery.
- Keep philanthropic storytelling separate from corporate sales content.

Direction for the current Vercel build.

KEEP / BUILD ON	REMOVE / REDUCE	REPLACE WITH
Modern codebase and responsive framework	Long chains of conceptual wealth language	Concrete corporate copy
Improved spacing and cleaner page construction	Excessive card grids	Large editorial sections
Desire to simplify and organize the brand	Startup/SaaS visual patterns	Traditional corporate/editorial layout
Strong use of sectioning	Store-like homepage behavior	Portfolio and case studies
Opportunity for better photography	Promotional discount treatments	Professional program information
Global ambition	Unverified or overstated office positioning	Accurate market presence
Premium presentation goal	Repeated "legacy/wealth/private" adjectives	Quiet confidence and evidence
Distinct service areas	Legal/financial absolutes	Carefully reviewed factual claims

Critical brand separation

Corporate enterprise first

A visitor evaluating JUBOH for a major development, financing, institutional advisory, or government opportunity should encounter the company as an operating enterprise before encountering books, workshops, coaching offers, or promotional pricing.

Use references for restraint - not imitation.

The following websites are useful reference points for information hierarchy, use of real assets, editorial scale, and confidence. The goal is not to copy their layouts, but to study how established organizations communicate without over-explaining themselves.

Hines www.hines.com

Strong benchmark for real estate, development, investment, properties, insights, leadership, and institutional restraint.

Related Companies www.related.com

Useful example of organizing a diversified real estate enterprise across multiple lines of business without turning the homepage into a product catalog.

Traditional private investment firms Category reference

Use as inspiration for typography, white space, case-study presentation, leadership, and restrained capital-markets language.

Architectural/editorial publications Category reference

Use as inspiration for full-bleed imagery, typography scale, project storytelling, captions, and visual pacing.

Do not use as primary references

- AI-generated startup landing pages
- Crypto / fintech dashboards
- Direct-response coaching funnels
- Generic family-office templates
- Overly animated agency websites
- Websites that use luxury primarily through black-and-gold effects rather than substance

Required next design pass.

The next presentation should demonstrate the revised direction before the development team continues building deep page templates. Please provide the following for review:

15. Revised sitemap and primary navigation.
16. Homepage desktop concept at full-page length.
17. Homepage mobile concept.
18. One Real Estate / Project case-study template.
19. One corporate service page template.
20. One Leadership page / profile template.
21. One Executive Education landing page showing how the commercial programs are visually separated from the corporate site.
22. Proposed typography system with exact font selections and hierarchy.
23. Proposed color palette and UI component rules.
24. Photography treatment and image-selection guidelines.
25. Footer, contact, and utility-navigation treatment.
26. A short list of copy edits required to remove overly conceptual or risky language from the current build.

Approval standard

- The first screen clearly identifies JUBOH and what the enterprise does.
- The site feels established without trying to look expensive.
- Real projects and people dominate the visual experience.
- Corporate services are clearly separated from coaching, workshops, and products.
- The navigation is understandable without explanation.
- The copy is concise, concrete, and credible.
- Mobile layouts preserve the same sense of restraint and hierarchy.
- No component looks like a generic AI-generated website template.

Final creative standard

The visitor should leave with a simple impression: JUBOH is a serious, sophisticated enterprise with real operating experience, significant relationships, ambitious projects, and the confidence to communicate with restraint.
